

No. 17-415

---

---

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

R.J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY, ET AL.,
Petitioners,

v.

THERESA GRAHAM, as personal representative of Faye
Dale Graham, Deceased,
Respondent.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit

BRIEF FOR AMICI CURIAE THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF
AMERICA, THE AMERICAN TORT REFORM
ASSOCIATION, THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF
MANUFACTURERS, AND THE BUSINESS
COUNCIL OF ALABAMA
IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

WARREN POSTMAN
JANET GALERIA
U.S. CHAMBER LITIGATION
CENTER, INC.
1615 H Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20062
(202) 463-5337

Counsel for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America

ANTON METLITSKY
(Counsel of Record)
ametlitsky@omm.com
O'MELVENY & MYERS LLP
Times Square Tower
7 Times Square
New York, N.Y. 10036
(212) 326-2000

Counsel for Amici Curiae

[Additional Counsel Listed Inside Cover]

---

---

H. SHERMAN JOYCE
LAUREN S. JARRELL
AMERICAN TORT REFORM
ASSOCIATION
1101 Connecticut Avenue,
N.W. Suite 400
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 682-1163

*Counsel for the American
Tort Reform Association*

LINDA E. KELLY
LELAND P. FROST
MANUFACTURERS' CENTER
FOR LEGAL ACTION
733 10TH STREET, N.W.
SUITE 700
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001
(202) 637-3000

Counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers

JASON ZARROW
O'MELVENY & MYERS LLP
1625 Eye Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 383-5300

Counsel for Amici Curiae

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page(s)
INTEREST OF THE AMICI CURIAE .....	1
INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT.....	3
ARGUMENT .....	8
I. Class-Action Defendants Have A Due- Process Right To A Judicial Determination Of Every Element Of The Plaintiff’s Claim .....	8
A. Defendants Have A Due-Process Right To A Judicial Determination Of Every Issue Necessary To Establish Liability .....	8
B. The “Actually Decided” Precondition To Preclusion Protects This Right In The Context Of Multiple Adjudications.....	10
C. Class Treatment Is Warranted Only Where There Is A Method For Classwide Adjudication That Is Consistent With Due Process.....	15
D. The Decision Below Is Inconsistent With These Fundamental Principles, And Sanctions Extreme And Repeated Due-Process Violations.....	17
II. The Decision Below Invites Abusive “Issue” Class Actions And Harms American Businesses.....	19
A. Issue Classes And Broad Preclusion Rules Inevitably Lead To Litigation Abuse .....	19

TABLE OF CONTENTS

(continued)

	Page(s)
B. Issue Classes And Broad Preclusion Rules Harm American Businesses And Consumers .....	22
CONCLUSION .....	24

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

	Page(s)
CASES
Am. Surety Co. v. Baldwin , 287 U.S. 156 (1932).....	8
Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor , 521 U.S. 591 (1997).....	20
Bell v. Burson , 402 U.S. 535 (1971).....	9
Blonder-Tongue Labs., Inc. v. Univ. of Ill. Foundation , 402 U.S. 313 (1971).....	15
Bobby v. Bies , 556 U.S. 825 (2009).....	13
Cooper v. Fed. Reserve Bank of Richmond , 467 U.S. 867 (1984).....	16
Cromwell v. Cty. of Sac , 94 U.S. 351 (1876).....	13
De Sollar v. Hanscome , 158 U.S. 216 (1895).....	13
Deposit Guar. Nat'l Bank v. Roper , 445 U.S. 326 (1980).....	16
Engle v. Liggett Grp., Inc. , 945 So.2d 1246 (Fla. 2006) .....	passim
Ex parte Flexible Products Co. , 915 So.2d 34 (Ala. 2005).....	21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

(continued)

	Page(s)
Fayerweather v. Ritch , 195 U.S. 276 (1904).....	6, 9, 10, 14
Graham v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. , 782 F.3d 1261 (11th Cir. 2015).....	17
Hart Steel Co. v. R. Supply Co. , 244 U.S. 294 (1917).....	10
Holt v. Virginia , 381 U.S. 131 (1965).....	8
Honda Motor Co. v. Oberg , 512 U.S. 415 (1994).....	6, 10, 11
Hopkins v. Lee , 19 U.S. 109 (1821).....	13
ICC v. Louisville &amp; N.R. Co. , 227 U.S. 88 (1913).....	8, 9
In re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc. , 51 F.3d 1293 (7th Cir. 1995).....	23
In re Whirlpool Corp. Front-Loading Washer Prods. Liab. Litig. , 722 F.3d 838 (6th Cir. 2013).....	21
Lindsey v. Normet , 405 U.S. 56 (1972).....	5, 8
Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore , 439 U.S. 322 (1979).....	22
Pennoyer v. Neff , 95 U.S. 714 (1877).....	10

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

(continued)

	Page(s)
Philip Morris USA, Inc. v. Douglas , 110 So.3d 419 (Fla. 2013) .....	4, 17
Philip Morris USA, Inc. v. Scott , 131 S. Ct. 1 (2010).....	9, 19, 21
Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. City of Newport, Ky. , 247 U.S. 464 (1918).....	10
Richards v. Jefferson Cty. , 517 U.S. 793 (1996).....	10, 11
Russell v. Place , 94 U.S. 606 (1876).....	13
San Remo Hotel, L.P. v. City &amp; Cty. of San Francisco , 545 U.S. 323 (2005).....	11
Saunders v. Shaw , 244 U.S. 317 (1917).....	9
Scott v. Am. Tobacco Co. , 949 So.2d 1266 (La. Ct. App. 2007).....	21
Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Allstate Ins. Co. , 559 U.S. 393 (2010).....	7, 16
Taylor v. Sturgell , 553 U.S. 880 (2008).....	13, 14, 16
United States v. Armour &amp; Co. , 402 U.S. 673 (1971).....	9

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

(continued)

	Page(s)
W. &amp; A. R.R. v. Henderson , 279 U.S. 639 (1929).....	5, 9
Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes , 564 U.S. 338 (2011).....	7, 16
Wash., A. &amp; G. Steam Packet Co. v. Sickles , 65 U.S. 333 (1860).....	12, 13
 RULES
Fed. R. Civ. P. 23.....	22
Fed. R. Civ. P. 23, Adv. Comm. Notes.....	16
 OTHER AUTHORITIES
18 C. Wright et al, Federal Practice and Procedure § 4417 (2d ed. 2002).....	15, 17
2 Coke, The First Part of the Institutes of the Laws of England; or, A Commentary upon Littleton § 667(f) (London, W Clarke 1817).....	11
Dig. 44.2.7.4.....	12
Developments in the Law Res Judicata , 65 Harv. L. Rev. 818 (1952).....	12
George S. Bower, The Doctrine of Res Judicata § 377 (1924) .....	12
J.C. Wells, A Treatise on the Doctrines of Res Adjudicata and Stare Decicis 173 (1878).....	12

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

(continued)

	Page(s)
J.E. Goudsmit, The Pandects; A Treatise on the Roman Law 330 (1873).....	12
Jon Romberg, Half a Loaf is Predominant and Superior to None: Class Certification of Particular Issues Under Rule 23(c)(4)(A) , 2002 Utah L. Rev. 249 (2002).....	20
Meiring de Villiers, Technological Risk and Issue Preclusion: A Legal and Policy Critique , 9 Cornell J. L. & Pub. Pol'y 523 (2000).....	23
Note, Collateral Estoppel By Judgment , 52 Colum. L. Rev. 647 (1952) .....	12
Richard A. Epstein, The Consolidation of Complex Litigation: A Critical Evaluation of the ALI Proposal , 10 J.L. & Com. 1 (1990).....	23
Robert W. Millar, Historical Relation of Estoppel by Record to Res Judicata , 35 Ill. L. Rev. 41 (1940) .....	12
Steven P. Nonkes, Reducing the Unfair Effects of Nonmutual Issue Preclusion Through Damages Limits , 94 Cornell L. Rev. 1459 (2009) .....	23
The Duchess of Kingston's Case , 20 Howell's State Trials 538 (House of Lords 1776) .....	6, 11

INTEREST OF THE AMICI CURIAE<sup>1</sup>

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America is the world's largest business federation. The Chamber represents 300,000 direct members and indirectly represents the interests of more than three million companies and professional organizations of every size, in every industry sector, and from every region of the country. The Chamber represents the interests of its members before the courts, Congress, and the Executive Branch. To that end, the Chamber regularly files amicus curiae briefs in cases that raise issues of vital concern to the Nation's business community.

The American Tort Reform Association (ATRA) is a broad-based coalition of businesses, corporations, municipalities, associations, and professional firms that have pooled their resources to promote reform of the civil-justice system with the goal of ensuring fairness, balance, and predictability in civil litigation. For more than a decade, ATRA has filed amicus briefs in cases involving important liability issues.

The National Association of Manufacturers (NAM) is the largest manufacturing association in the United States. It is a national not-for-profit trade association representing small and large manufacturers in every industrial sector and in all 50 states. Manufacturing employs nearly 12 million men and women, contributes more than $2.17 trillion to the economy annually, has the largest economic impact of any major sector, and accounts for three-quarters of private-sector research and development. The NAM is the powerful voice of the manufacturing community and the leading advocate for a policy agenda that helps manufacturers compete in the global economy and create jobs across the United States.

---

<sup>1</sup> Pursuant to Rule 37.6, no counsel for any party authored this brief in whole or in part and no counsel or party made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. Counsel of record for both parties received timely notice of the intent to file this brief. All parties have granted blanket consent to the filing of amicus briefs, and their consent letters are on file with the Clerk's office.

The Business Council of Alabama (BCA) is a non-partisan statewide business association representing the interests and concerns of nearly one million working Alabamians through its member companies and organizational partnerships. While the BCA's membership includes many of Alabama's largest companies, including more than 1,300 manufacturers, 85 percent of BCA members are small businesses. BCA member businesses are vitally affected by judicial decisions impacting business dealings in the State. Thus, the BCA frequently appears as amicus curiae where the issues raised are of widespread importance and concern to its members.

Amici have a strong interest in reversal of the ruling below because the Eleventh Circuit's opinion is contrary to longstanding precedent of this Court, and undermines the fundamental due-process rights of American businesses. If allowed to stand, the decision has the potential to transform dramatically the law of issue preclusion and improperly expose amici's members—and all companies doing business in the United States—to precisely the type of burdensome litigation that the doctrine of issue preclusion is designed to avoid.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Two decades ago, the Florida court system set out on an ambitious—albeit fundamentally misguided—project of putting virtually the entire cigarette industry on trial. At the heart of that litigation was a single class action designed to litigate whether cigarettes manufactured by multiple defendants over a span of forty years were defective, and whether cigarette manufacturers were negligent in marketing them.

Phase I of that litigation took the form of a year-long trial that included numerous different theories of liability, many of which applied only to some (but not all) manufacturers, some (but not all) products, and some (but not all) time periods. The jury was never asked to determine whether each of a particular manufacturer's products was defective, or to define a particular period of liability for any. Rather, the jury was asked only to determine (i) as to defective design, whether each manufacturer manufactured a defective product during the relevant decades-long period, and (ii) as to negligence, whether each manufacturer failed to exercise reasonable care during the period.

The jury answered both questions in the affirmative—which it was required to do so long as it found that a manufacturer marketed some defective product or acted negligently at some point during the relevant period. The plan was to decide at a later phase (Phase III) of the litigation defendants' liability to individual class members. As the Florida Supreme Court itself explained, the Phase I jury findings “did not determine whether the defendants were liable to anyone.” Engle v. Liggett Grp., Inc., 945 So.2d 1246, 1263 (Fla. 2006) (quotation omitted). The liability phase of the litigation (Phase III) never happened, because the Florida Supreme Court held that individual issues predominated over common ones, so the class certified by the trial court could not continue. Id. at 1254.

The question here is whether the jury’s Phase I findings can be given preclusive effect as to defendants’ liability. That question answers itself—an absolute precondition for preclusion is that the question at issue must have been actually decided, and it is impossible to determine whether the jury actually decided any element of any individual plaintiff’s claims against defendants. Yet, remarkably, the Florida Supreme Court and the Eleventh Circuit have disagreed.

While the Florida Supreme Court decertified the class prospectively, it retroactively certified an issue class and directed Florida courts to give the jury’s generalized findings “res judicata effect.” Engle, 945 So.2d at 1269-70. By res judicata, the Court later clarified, it meant claim preclusion—the Engle defendants were barred from contesting the “claim” that their cigarettes were defective in follow-on individual suits. Philip Morris USA, Inc. v. Douglas, 110 So.3d 419, 432 (Fla. 2013).

The en banc Eleventh Circuit declined to endorse that novel approach in the decision below. Pet. App. 23-24. But the Eleventh Circuit replaced this unorthodox approach to claim preclusion with an even more fundamental error. Even though the Florida Supreme Court had held that Phase I did not include any finding of liability, the Eleventh Circuit reimagined the jury's verdict to have found each defendant liable as to every product during the entire forty-year period at issue. And the court of appeals further held that this "finding" must be given issue preclusive effect.

The Eleventh Circuit's decision is irreconcilable with settled principles of preclusion law, which themselves derive from fundamental due-process principles. See Pet. 20-30.

Defendants possess a fundamental due-process right "to present every available defense." Lindsey v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56, 66 (1972) (quotations omitted). That right protects more than just a defendant's ability to present evidence and make arguments on disputed issues—at its core, it necessarily entitles a defendant to a "judicial determination" of those contested issues before it is deprived of property. W. & A. R.R. v. Henderson, 279 U.S. 639, 642 (1929). Liability without adjudication, this Court has repeatedly held, is anathema to due process.

That principle animates the most basic rule of issue preclusion: a defendant cannot be barred from contesting an issue in a subsequent case unless that issue was actually decided against it in a prior one. This "actually decided" requirement ensures that the doctrine of collateral estoppel does not deprive a defendant of its right to a judicial determination of every issue necessary to establish liability.<sup>2</sup>

This Court has for more than a century recognized that this “actually decided” rule is compelled by due process. In Fayerweather v. Ritch, 195 U.S. 276 (1904), the Court recognized a constitutional right to a “judicial determination of the fact upon which” a deprivation of property rests. Id. at 298-99. Where, as here, “testimony was offered at the prior trial upon several distinct issues, the decision of any one of which would justify the verdict”—in other words, where it is impossible to tell what was actually decided—due process requires that “the plea of res judicata must fail.” Id. at 307.

This rule is as old as the Western legal tradition itself. Common law courts gave preclusive effect only to determinations “directly upon the point”; “any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment,” by contrast, could not be used as “a bar.” The Duchess of Kingston’s Case, 20 Howell’s State Trials 538 (House of Lords 1776). “[A]brogation of a well-established common-law protection” presumptively violates due process, Honda Motor Co. v. Oberg, 512 U.S. 415, 430 (1994), and any tampering with the “actually decided” requirement certainly violates due process by depriving a defendant of its right to a judicial determination on every disputed element of the plaintiff’s claim.

That basic principle obviously applies to class actions, just as it does to individual actions. The class action is a procedural vehicle that, by rule, must leave “the parties’ legal rights and duties intact and the rules of decision unchanged.” Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 559 U.S. 393, 408 (2010) (plurality opinion). Class procedures cannot be used to deprive defendants of their right to litigate, and have a judge or jury determine, the issues raised. See Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 367 (2011).

---

<sup>2</sup> Collateral estoppel and issue preclusion describe the same concept. And both issue preclusion and its cousin, claim preclusion, fall under the broad header of res judicata.

The Eleventh Circuit’s rejection of these principles is an invitation to abuse of the class vehicle. Absent badly needed correction by this Court, Engle and its progeny threaten to usher in a new era of mass-tort litigation, in which generic, all-encompassing “issue” classes are tried. Under this novel regime, so long as the evidence is sufficient to support the jury’s finding on any one theory of liability, defendants in subsequent litigation will be barred from contesting all of them. A single jury verdict, in other words, could spell doom for an entire industry, ratcheting up already-immense settlement pressures and raising the stakes beyond recognition for any liability-phase issue trial.

This Court’s review is needed to ensure that class litigation, its effects magnified by permissive preclusion doctrines, is not abused in this manner. And even more important, the Court’s intervention is required to reestablish the basic principle of Anglo-American jurisprudence that a defendant cannot be deprived of property without a judicial determination of its liability.

The petition should be granted.

ARGUMENT*I. CLASS-ACTION DEFENDANTS HAVE A DUE-PROCESS RIGHT TO A JUDICIAL DETERMINATION OF EVERY ELEMENT OF THE PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM

No one would dispute that if Engle had been an individual action against an individual defendant, the defendant could not be held liable in that proceeding without a judicial determination of every issue necessary to hold the defendant liable. Nor would anyone dispute that, absent such a determination, the defendant could not be precluded from contesting those issues in subsequent litigation. It should be just as obvious that the same rules apply in class actions: class-action defendants have the same right as individual defendants to a judicial determination of the claims against them, and due process forbids foreclosing a defendant from contesting an issue unless that issue has already been judicially decided.

A. Defendants Have A Due-Process Right To A Judicial Determination Of Every Issue Necessary To Establish Liability

Defendants have a fundamental due process right to “present every available defense.” Lindsey, 405 U.S. at 66 (quoting Am. Surety Co. v. Baldwin, 287 U.S. 156, 168 (1932)). “The right to be heard,” this Court has explained, “must necessarily embody a right to ... raise relevant issues,” Holt v. Virginia, 381 U.S. 131, 136 (1965), and must allow the defendant to “test the sufficiency” of the plaintiff’s case by offering “evidence in explanation or rebuttal,” ICC v. Louisville & N.R. Co., 227 U.S. 88, 93 (1913); Saun- ders v. Shaw, 244 U.S. 317, 319 (1917). Indeed, “[i]t is a proposition which hardly seems to need explication that a hearing which excludes consideration of an element essential to the decision” does not satisfy due process. Bell v. Burson, 402 U.S. 535, 542 (1971).

The right to “litigate the issues raised,” United States v. Armour & Co., 402 U.S. 673, 682 (1971), protects a still more fundamental due-process guarantee—viz., the right to have those issues actually decided before liability is imposed. Due process would be a hollow guarantee if it safeguarded a defendant’s right to contest the plaintiff’s evidence and allegations but not the right to a “judicial determination of issues involving life, liberty, or property.” Henderson, 279 U.S. at 642; see Fayerweather, 195 U.S. at 298-99 (recognizing constitutional right to a “judicial determination of the fact upon which” a deprivation of property rests). This Court has thus explained that procedures that allow for liability without adjudication are irreconcilable with our system of justice. See, e.g., Henderson, 279 U.S. at 642 (presumption “that operates to deny a fair opportunity to repel it[] violates the due process clause”); Louisville & N. R.R., 227 U.S. at 91, 93 (rejecting contention that rate-setting orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission could be “conclusive” or based on findings “not formally proved at the hearing”); see also Philip Morris USA, Inc. v. Scott, 131 S. Ct. 1, 3 (2010) (Scalia, J., in chambers) (state-court decision that “eliminated any need for [plaintiffs] to prove, and denied any opportunity for [defendants] to contest,” an element of a claim gives rise to significant due process concern).<sup>3</sup>

B. The “Actually Decided” Precondition To Preclusion Protects This Right In The Context Of Multiple Adjudications

These fundamental principles apply equally in the context of multiple adjudications. The Court has thus long recognized that use of preclusion doctrines, whether in federal or state court, is circumscribed by due process. See Fayerweather, 195 U.S. at 297-99. “Th[e] doctrine of res judicata,” this Court has explained, “is not a mere matter of practice or procedure inherited from a more technical time than ours. It is a rule of fundamental and substantial justice,” Hart Steel Co. v. R. Supply Co., 244 U.S. 294, 299 (1917), that sounds in due process itself, see, e.g., Richards v. Jefferson Cty., 517 U.S. 793, 797 & n.4 (1996); Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. City of Newport, Ky., 247 U.S. 464, 476 (1918). Chief among these due-process protections is the common-sense requirement that an issue have been actually and necessarily decided against the defendant in a prior litigation before the defendant can be precluded from contesting it in a future one.

1. Adherence to time-tested judicial procedures “protect[s] against arbitrary and inaccurate adjudication” and ensures that litigants receive due process of law. Oberg, 512 U.S. at 430; see also, e.g., Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 733 (1877) (Due process ensures

---

<sup>3</sup> The right to a judicial determination of the elements of the plaintiff’s claim is buttressed in federal court by the Seventh Amendment, which requires that the jury decide any issues in question. See Pet. App. 127, 131, 248 (Tjoflat, J.).

“a course of legal proceedings according to those rules and principles which have been established in our systems of jurisprudence for the protection and enforcement of private rights.”). For that reason, the “touchstone” of the analysis is “traditional practice.” Oberg, 512 U.S. at 430. “[A]brogation of a well-established common-law protection against arbitrary deprivations,” id.—including “extreme applications of the doctrine of res judicata,” Richards, 517 U.S. at 797—“raises a presumption that a due process violation has occurred,” Oberg, 512 U.S. at 430.

The actually decided requirement is precisely such a well-established protection. It has deep historical roots, and its abrogation deprives a defendant of due process of law.

a. The rule “that parties should not be permitted to relitigate issues that have been resolved by courts of competent jurisdiction ... predates the Republic,” San Remo Hotel, L.P. v. City & Cty. of San Francisco, 545 U.S. 323, 336 (2005), and the actually decided requirement has long been a key precondition to this doctrine. “Every estoppel,” noted Sir Edward Coke in 1628, “must be certaine to every intent, and [is] not to be taken by argument or inference.” 2 Coke, The First Part of the Institutes of the Laws of England; or, A Commentary upon Littleton § 667(f) & 325b (London, W Clarke 1817). That rule was famously affirmed in 1776 in The Duchess of Kingston’s Case: A party may only be precluded by a determination “directly upon the point,” and not by a finding that can only be “inferred by argument.” 20 Howell’s State Trials 538. The “rule enunciated in The Duchess of Kingston’s Case,” one treatise later observed, is “concise, comprehensive and complete” and has been “universally adopted in England and America.” J.C. Wells, A Treatise on the Doctrines of Res Adjudicata and Stare Decicis 173 (1878).

In fact, this rule is older than the common law itself: “The authority of the res judicata, with the limitations under which it is admitted, is derived ... from the Roman law and the Canonists.” Wash., A. & G. Steam Packet Co. v. Sickles, 65 U.S. 333, 341 (1860); see Note, Collateral Estoppel By Judgment, 52 Colum. L. Rev. 647, 647 n.1 (1952). The Roman principle exceptio rei judicatæ, Ulpian explained, was “an effective bar to any proceeding in which the same question as that which has already been decided is put in controversy again between the same parties.” Dig. 44.2.7.4 (quoted in George S. Bower, The Doctrine of Res Judicata § 377 (1924)) (emphasis added); see also, e.g., J.E. Goudsmit, The Pandects; A Treatise on the Roman Law 330 (1873) (“It was necessary that the new action should present for decision the same question as had already been determined by the first suit.” (emphasis added)). Other scholars trace the origin of the actually decided requirement to Germanic law, which “had been brought into English law before the reception of the Roman principle.” Developments in the Law Res Judicata, 65 Harv. L. Rev. 818, 820 (1952) (“The binding force of specific determinations where the second suit is on a different cause of action, known today as collateral estoppel, was derived from medieval Germanic law, which had developed a preclusion based on what was alleged and proved at the trial.” (citing Robert W. Millar, Historical Relation of Estoppel by Record to Res Judicata, 35 Ill. L. Rev. 41, 41-44 (1940)).

b. The requirement that an issue be “actually litigated and resolved” before a party can be precluded from contesting it has long been a staple of American jurisprudence. Taylor v. Sturgell, 553 U.S. 880, 892 & n.5 (2008). As early as 1821, this Court noted the “general rule, that a fact which has been directly tried, and decided ... puts an end to all further controversy concerning the points thus decided between the parties to such suit.” Hopkins v. Lee, 19 U.S. 109, 113 (1821). That rule, the Court observed, “has found its way into every system of jurisprudence” and was applicable to all judgments “so far as they profess to decide the particular matter.” Id. at 114. But for points that “could only be inferred by arguing from the decree,” no preclusive effect would lie. Id.

This Court has since uniformly insisted that preclusion is improper unless it is “certain that the precise fact was determined by the former judgment.” De Sollar v. Hanscome, 158 U.S. 216, 221 (1895); see Bobby v. Bies, 556 U.S. 825, 834 (2009) (“If a judgment does not depend on a given determination, re-litigation of that determination is not precluded.”); Russell v. Place, 94 U.S. 606, 608 (1876) (holding preclusion improper unless it can be shown that “the precise question was raised and determined in the former suit”); Cromwell v. Cty. of Sac, 94 U.S. 351, 353 (1876) (“[T]he inquiry must always be as to the point or question actually litigated and determined in the original action, not what might have been thus litigated and determined. Only upon such matters is the judgment conclusive in another action.”); Sickles, 65 U.S. at 344-45.

This Court explained in Fayerweather that this requirement not only derives from common law, but is mandated by due process. Fayerweather concerned the plaintiffs' right to share in an estate, which was contingent on the validity of certain releases. 195 U.S. at 298. The federal court dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that prior state proceedings had already decided the validity of the releases. This Court held that it had jurisdiction over the plaintiffs' appeal on the ground that it presented a question under the Fifth Amendment: If the state jury never made "any finding of the vital fact" of the validity of the releases, the federal court's application of res judicata would have "tak[en] away and depriv[ed] them of their property" in violation of due process. Id. at 298-99. Due process, the Court held, does not permit a court to give "unwarranted effect to a decision" by accepting "as a conclusive determination" a judgment "without any judicial determination of the fact upon which alone [the] deprivation could be justified." Id. Specifically, where "testimony was offered at the prior trial upon several distinct issues, the decision of any one of which would justify the verdict or judgment," then due process requires that "the plea of res judicata must fail." Id. at 307.

2. It is easy to see why the actually decided requirement is constitutionally mandated. In all civil trials, the plaintiff must put on evidence establishing the elements of her claim, the defendant must be allowed to contest that proof and establish any available defenses, and the factfinder must decide controverted issues. Where the plaintiff demonstrates that an element of her claim (or an affirmative defense) was "actually litigated and resolved" against the defendant in a prior proceeding, Taylor, 553 U.S. at 892, there is no impairment of the defendant's right to litigate the issues raised or to a judicial determination of its liability, because the defendant has already been afforded those rights. In other words, the defendant has received “one full and fair opportunity for judicial resolution of the same issue,” Blonder-Tongue Labs., Inc. v. Univ. of Ill. Foundation, 402 U.S. 313, 328 (1971), and is merely foreclosed from relitigating it and having it re-decided.

But without a showing that a disputed issue was actually decided in the prior litigation, there can be no assurance that the defendant has ever been afforded its right to a judicial determination of the issue at all. The only functional effect of issue preclusion in that circumstance is to relieve the plaintiff of the burden of proving every element of her claim. Basic notions of fairness mandate that a defendant cannot be deprived of its property on so slender a reed, which is why courts, including this one, have insisted that “[p]roof that the identical issue was involved ... is an absolute due process prerequisite to the application of collateral estoppel.” 18 C. Wright et al, Federal Practice and Procedure § 4417 (2d ed. 2002) (quotations omitted) (“Wright & Miller”).

C. Class Treatment Is Warranted Only Where There Is A Method For Classwide Adjudication That Is Consistent With Due Process

These protections apply fully to class litigation. “The class action is an exception to the usual rule that litigation is conducted by and on behalf of the individual named parties only,” and to justify a departure from this ordinary rule, the class plaintiff bears the burden of showing that classwide adjudication is appropriate. Dukes, 564 U.S. at 348 (quotations omitted). Class treatment is never appropriate, however, where the efficiencies of class treatment can only be secured by “sacrificing procedural fairness.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) advisory committee’s note to 1966 amendment.

Indeed, Rule 23’s “procedural protections” are themselves grounded in “due process,” Taylor, 553 U.S. at 901, and were carefully crafted to preclude aggregation of claims when doing so would undermine defendants’ due-process rights to litigate the issues raised. This Court has thus avoided reading the Rule in a manner that would deprive a defendant of its right “to litigate its ... defenses to individual claims,” and has instead required that both claims and defenses be amenable to classwide adjudication to proceed under Rule 23. Dukes, 564 U.S. at 367. The class action, after all, is merely a procedural device “ancillary to the litigation of substantive claims,” Deposit Guar. Nat’l Bank v. Roper, 445 U.S. 326, 332 (1980), that “leaves the parties’ legal rights and duties intact and the rules of decision unchanged,” Shady Grove, 559 U.S. at 408.

This Court has thus long recognized the application of the fundamental requirements of issue preclusion in the class context. See, e.g., Cooper v. Fed. Reserve Bank of Richmond, 467 U.S. 867, 876 (1984) (rejecting issue preclusion in discrimination case despite prior class judgment that an employer did not engage in pattern or practice of discrimination because that finding did not necessarily decide whether the employer had discriminated against particular employees). As one leading treatise explains: Class actions may have issue preclusive effect—but only “on the issues actually and necessarily decided. Care must be taken in delineating exactly what issues were decided, however, since only identical issues will be precluded in subsequent litigation.” 7AA Wright & Miller § 1789.

D. The Decision Below Is Inconsistent With These Fundamental Principles, And Sanctions Extreme And Repeated Due-Process Violations

The court below paid only lip service to these venerable principles. As the Florida Supreme Court candidly acknowledged in Douglas, the jury’s general verdict is “useless” for issue preclusion purposes because it is impossible to tell what the jury actually and necessarily decided. 110 So.3d at 433. While the Engle plaintiffs asserted myriad theories of product defect, all the Engle jury found was that each defendant “placed cigarettes on the market that were defective and unreasonably dangerous,” 945 So.2d at 1257, sometime during the relevant forty-year period, and that defendants failed to exercise reasonable care sometime during that period.

That finding could have been based on any number of rationales, many of which will necessarily have no application in a follow-on case. See, e.g., Graham v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 782 F.3d 1261, 1281 (11th Cir. 2015), superseded en banc by the decision below (noting that “[i]t is impossible to discern the extent to which the Phase I findings specifically match up with each of the Engle defendants” and that “the Phase I interrogatories shed no light on which defects the jury found relevant”). The jury’s verdict could have been premised on a finding that “Light” cigarettes are defective because of the phenomenon of compensation—or not. The verdict could have been premised on a finding that some cigarettes’ breathing holes were too close to the lips—or not. The verdict could have been premised on a finding that some cigarettes use high-nicotine tobacco called Y-1 or that ammonia was sometimes used to increase nicotine levels—or not. In short, there is no assurance that the precise issue to be precluded—i.e., whether the particular cigarettes smoked by a particular plaintiff were defective or negligently marketed—was actually decided by the jury in the prior proceeding.

This is not surprising. As the Florida Supreme Court noted, the jury’s Phase I findings by design “did not determine whether the defendants were liable to anyone,” Engle, 945 So.2d at 1263 (quotations omitted), because such liability determinations were not meant to be made until a later phase that never happened. The Eleventh Circuit nonetheless sanctioned the application of issue preclusion, by “effectively rewrit[ing]” Florida law, Pet. App. 229 (Tjoflat, J.); see also Pet. 26, and ignoring the jury’s actual findings. The court below simply asserted that the jury found that all cigarettes were defective due to their inherent health risks and addictiveness, despite a clear holding by the Florida Supreme Court that it is impossible to determine whether the jury made such a finding, not to mention clear record evidence demonstrating that the defect finding could have rested on any number of narrower grounds. In effect, the Eleventh Circuit declared that petitioners were forever precluded from contesting the defectiveness of any particular brand or type of cigarette in follow-on litigation notwithstanding the fact that no jury has ever ascertainably found that a particular brand or type of cigarette was actually defective. As a result, petitioners are now barred in literally thousands of follow-on cases from defending their products without ever receiving a judicial determination that any one of them is in fact defective. That result is as wrong as it sounds.

“The extent to which class treatment may constitutionally reduce the normal requirements of due process is an important question.” Scott, 131 S. Ct. at 4 (Scalia, J., in Chambers). That question is all the more important here given the flagrant due-process violations sanctioned by the Eleventh Circuit, which, absent this Court’s intervention, will be repeated in every Engle-progeny case. See Pet. 1-2, 19, 26-30. The Court should grant the petition for certiorari and reverse.

II. THE DECISION BELOW INVITES ABUSIVE “ISSUE” CLASS ACTIONS AND HARMS AMERICAN BUSINESSES

This Court’s review is also warranted to ensure that so-called “issue” classes, coupled with novel applications of preclusion doctrine, are not used by state and federal courts to trample defendants’ due-process rights.

A. Issue Classes And Broad Preclusion Rules Inevitably Lead To Litigation Abuse

Unless carefully regulated, issue classes can be used—as they were by the Florida Supreme Court in Engle—to circumvent the ordinary requirements that “assure the class cohesion that legitimizes representative action in the first place.” Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 623 (1997). If all it takes for class certification is the predominance of a common question as to the particular issue to be certified—rather than the predominance of common legal and factual issues generally—then the ordinary class-certification requirements designed to safeguard due process are effectively meaningless. After all, a creative lawyer invariably will be able to identify at least one legal or factual issue subject to common proof. As one commentator has observed, issue classes threaten to “fundamentally revamp the nature of class actions” by subjecting every mass-tort case to at least partial class treatment. Jon Romberg, Half a Loaf is Predominant and Superior to None: Class Certification of Particular Issues Under Rule 23(c)(4)(A), 2002 Utah L. Rev. 249, 263 (2002) (asserting that “cases that do not otherwise meet the predominance and superiority requirements of Rule 23(b)(3) can be certified as issue classes”).

Issue classes are problematic in their own right, but combining them with expansive preclusion doctrines would magnify exponentially the opportunities for abuse. Normally, issue classes are justified on the ground that the supposedly common issue will be litigated at the outset, then the remaining individual issues of liability will be determined later in the same proceedings. But the expansive use of preclusion doctrines—as in the decision below—serves as an end run around even that safeguard, thus foreclosing litigation of those issues altogether. Once the “issue” of liability is determined in the abstract, no one has to prove that any defendant is actually liable to any plaintiff—under the Eleventh Circuit’s approach, individual plaintiffs can collect their money later in what are essentially claims-administration proceedings, without any opportunity for defendants to contest issues that have never actually been determined against them.

Indeed, there already has been a marked increase in the use of generic, aggregate trial proceedings designed to do just that. Perhaps the most startling example—besides this case—is Scott v. American Tobacco Co., another smoker class action where the court certified a class against multiple manufacturer defendants for a “[g]eneralized” trial on “fault and causation.” 949 So.2d 1266, 1271 (La. Ct. App. 2007). When the jury found that the defendants had committed fraud, the court understood that later proceedings would be overwhelmed by individualized issues, so it solved that problem by simply holding that reliance was not an element of the plaintiffs’ claims. Id. at 1277; see Scott, 131 S. Ct. at 3 (Scalia, J., in chambers). In In re Whirlpool Corporation Front-Loading Washer Products Liability Litigation, the Sixth Circuit affirmed a “liability class” designed to determine the defectiveness of 21 different models of front-loading washing machines over a period of 9 years. 722 F.3d 838, 844 (6th Cir. 2013). And in Ex parte Flexible Products Co., the court affirmed consolidated proceedings brought by more than 1,500 plaintiffs against 11 manufacturer defendants to culminate in a “consolidated common issues trial ... on all issues as to liability and causation.” 915 So.2d 34, 38, 40-43 (Ala. 2005). And these are just examples: Courts across the country have been confronted with similar requests to hold generic “liability” trials with perfunctory individualized proceedings to be held later.

B. Issue Classes And Broad Preclusion Rules Harm American Businesses And Consumers

This adventuresome use of aggregate litigation and preclusion doctrine, if left unchecked, invites abuse and poses a serious threat to American businesses.

As this Court long ago recognized, offensive issue preclusion—even if carefully circumscribed—promotes litigation. See Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 329-30 (1979). And the more likely the estoppel effect, the more likely follow-on litigation will be. The reason is simple: Giving estoppel effect to prior judgments makes future ones easier to secure by relieving plaintiffs of their burden to prove all the elements of their claims. That is all the more true when estoppel effect is given to broadly-defined issue classes. Class counsel can avoid the ordinarily-stringent requirements of Rule 23 (or its state law analogues) by carving out discrete “liability” issues for certification. And under the decision below, the broader the better: So long as the jury finds in plaintiffs’ favor on one of any number of theories on a generalized verdict form, all of them will have estoppel effect in future suits, even if they were never actually proved at trial.

The stakes for American businesses will be staggering. As it is, traditional issue preclusion poses the real “possibility that an erroneous decision in a hotly contested case will receive dispositive weight in all future cases.” Richard A. Epstein, The Consol- idation of Complex Litigation: A Critical Evaluation of the ALI Proposal, 10 J.L. & Com. 1, 59 (1990). And the more liberal the application of preclusion doctrine, the more likely an adverse judgment will “put[] the survival of entire industries at risk based on a single, possibly erroneous, judgment.” Meiring de Villiers, Technological Risk and Issue Preclusion: A Legal and Policy Critique, 9 Cornell J. L. & Pub. Pol’y 523, 524 (2000).

The inevitable result is tremendous pressure to settle even meritless claims. See Steven P. Nonkes, Reducing the Unfair Effects of Nonmutual Issue Preclusion Through Damages Limits, 94 Cornell L. Rev. 1459, 1483 n.144 (2009) (explaining that collateral estoppel may cause a defendant to settle to avoid the consequences of “an aberrational finding in” the first suit). And again, that pressure is only magnified in the context of issue class actions, where an aberrational verdict in the class portion of the proceedings is virtually certain to have adverse consequences in the proceedings that follow. See, e.g., In re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 51 F.3d 1293, 1300 (7th Cir. 1995) (vacating certification of issue class in product liability suit in part because the risk that a single verdict could “hurl the industry into bankruptcy” and would “likely” force a settlement, regardless of the merits).

The ripple effects of permissive class and preclusion rules will be felt throughout the economy, harming businesses and consumers alike. Litigation costs and settlement payouts are ultimately passed along, at least in part, to consumers in the form of higher prices, to employees in the form of lower wages, and to investors in the form of lower returns. And in the end, nobody wins—except the lawyers. Defense lawyers generate massive fees and plaintiffs’ lawyers are rewarded with immense bounties, often well out of proportion to the value of the class’s claims.

This Court’s review is needed to forestall such abusive litigation and restore preclusion doctrine to its proper place.

CONCLUSION

For all these reasons, as well as those presented in the petition for certiorari, the petition should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

WARREN POSTMAN
 JANET GALERIA
 U.S. CHAMBER LITIGATION
 CENTER, INC.
 1615 H Street, N.W.
 Washington, D.C. 20062
 (202) 463-5337
Counsel for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America

ANTON METLITSKY
(Counsel of Record)
 ametlitsky@omm.com
 O’MELVENY & MYERS LLP
 Times Square Tower
 7 Times Square
 New York, N.Y. 10036
 (212) 326-2000
Counsel for Amici Curiae

H. SHERMAN JOYCE
 LAUREN S. JARRELL
 AMERICAN TORT REFORM
 ASSOCIATION
 1101 Connecticut Avenue,
 N.W., Suite 400
 Washington, D.C. 20036
 (202) 682-1163
*Counsel for the American
 Tort Reform Association*

JASON ZARROW
 O’MELVENY & MYERS LLP
 1625 Eye Street, N.W.
 Washington, D.C. 20006
 (202) 383-5300
Counsel for Amici Curiae

LINDA E. KELLY
LELAND P. FROST
MANUFACTURERS' CENTER
FOR LEGAL ACTION
733 10TH STREET, N.W.
SUITE 700
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001
(202) 637-3000

Counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers