TOP RECIPIENTS FROM TOP PLAINTIFFS' FIRMS

Fifteen separate campaign committees received more than $10,000 from top trial lawyer campaign contributors since 2017. Much of the money given by the Top 20 plaintiffs' firm donors went into the coffers of LawPAC, the political action committee affiliated with the New York State Trial Lawyers Association. LawPAC received nearly $3.25 million from these firms since the beginning of 2017. Three other campaign committees received more than $100,000: current New York Governor Kathy Hochul, former New York Governor Andrew Cuomo and current New York Attorney General Leticia James.

LAWPAC AND ATL PAC RECIPIENT ANALYSIS

Due to strict campaign contribution limits to individual candidate committees,[1] two trial lawyer-affiliated political action committees, LawPAC (the political arm of the New York State Trial Lawyers Association) and ATL PAC (the political arm of the New York State Academy of Trial Lawyers), have been used to bundle trial lawyer contributions for distribution in bigger chunks than would be allowed for individual contributions.

Since 2017, LawPAC received $6,039,510 in campaign contributions and spent $6,153,659 over that same timeframe. Twelve separate campaign committees received more than $50,000 from LawPAC since 2017, with much of that money going to Democratic candidates and causes. Two committees – the Democratic Assembly Campaign Committee and the NYS Democratic Senate Campaign Committee – each received more than $800,000 in contributions from LawPAC.

INTERESTING DATA POINTS & ANALYSIS

Kings County and Subin Associates

The Kings County Democratic County Committee received the fifth-most money from top trial lawyer donors since 2017, receiving $43,500, all of which came from Subin Associates. Subin Associates has deep ties into Kings County[1] and Brooklyn[2], and at least one lawyer for the firm previously worked for the Kings County District Attorney.[3] A partner in the firm has also been honored by the Kings County Democratic County Committee.[4]

Brooklyn District Attorney Eric Gonzalez

Current Brooklyn District Attorney Eric Gonzalez received a total of more than $50,000 from several of the top trial law firm campaign donors over the course of his last campaigns. More than $35,000 of Gonzalez's campaign contributions came from Block O'Toole & Murphy. On their website, Block O'Toole & Murphy say they specialize in lawsuits from construction accidents and that Gonzalez has been a "trailblazer" on investigating these sorts of accidents.[5]

Methodology

Due to an inability to search by employer or job title, this data was populated by generating a list of top trial bar contributors to LawPAC, the political action committee affiliate of the New York State Trial Lawyers Association, the New York's primary trial lawyer trade group. With these limitations, the data used in this report was from direct law firm contributions to each candidate and committee. Individual campaign contributions by lawyers for the various firms were not used unless it is a firm that has a single person serving as the principal. This report further analyzes the political giving of select law firms that are among 2023's top local legal services advertisers in terms of both dollars spent on ads and the number of ads these firms placed.
