INTERESTING DATA POINTS & ANALYSIS

The Big Five Recipients of Trial Lawyer Contributions

Due to strict campaign contribution limits, any candidate committee pulling in more than $100,000 from trial lawyers shows a level of sustained industry support. Current California Governor Gavin Newsom's various campaign committees received more than $1.9 million in trial lawyer contributions from the Top 20 plaintiffs' firm donors. Campaign contribution limits for candidates for governor are $36,400 per election, meaning a number of trial lawyers gave maximum contributions to his campaign.[1]

Current Attorney General Rob Bonta and former Attorney General Xavier Becerra received approximately $340,000 and $250,000 respectively. Campaign contribution limits for candidates running for California statewide offices (other than candidates for governor) are $9,100 per election. [2] Former California Insurance Commissioner Dave Jones also received more than $225,000 in campaign contributions from the Top 20 plaintiffs' firm donors. Former Assembly Majority Leader Eloise Reyes raised approximately $140,000 from the Top 20 plaintiffs' firm donors at a maximum contribution level of $5,500 per election.[3]

Consumer Attorneys of California Behind Independent Expenditures for Legislative Candidates

The Consumer Attorneys of California Independent Campaign Committee spent $50,000 or more on independent expenditure campaigns on behalf of eight different legislative campaigns since 2017. Two legislative independent expenditures received more than $100,000: an independent campaign committee that successfully backed Caroline Menjivar for State Senate and an independent campaign committee opposing the successful recall of then-State Senator Josh Newman. A total of $65,000 was spent on an independent expenditure campaign backing Mike Eng's unsuccessful race for state senate in 2018, with $50,000 spent each on independent expenditure campaigns backing Rep. Reggie Jones-Sawyer, Rep. Wendy Carrillo, Rep. Lisa Calderon, Rep. Cottie Petrie-Norris and then-Sen. Sydney Kamlager.

METHODOLOGY

Due to limitations on what can be searched in California campaign finance disclosures, the list of top firms was created by combining all the campaign contributions to the top three groups run by the Consumer Attorneys of California and pulling the top law firm contributors to those groups. From there, all the contributions from those firms were put into a broader database for analysis.
